"Under the financial distress, he auctioned off his farm and moved to a mud-packed concrete compound in the center of the city of Pyongyang, the capital of North Korea, to join an amorphous mass of other desperate farmers who lived in similar conditions. His life in North Korea had been one of deprivation, fear, fear, fear, and fear of fear. ... Gen. Douglas was also concerned about the possible cyberattacks from the North Korean military. Although Kim Jong Un and the North Korean government have shown great interest in the potential threat of rogue computer hackers from the South, it is not clear whether or not these hackers are real or merely part of an elaborate North Korean deception campaign. It is only been since 2015 when North Korea first showed intent to create its own internet-based cyber-attack system by constructing its own, and suggested the possibility of using attacks against the United States in the future. The Internet and the Internet-based technologies are gradually being adopted by most of the world's population. These technologies, especially those used for accessing the Internet, are changing the way a person interacts with others and the way he/she conducts both routine and important activities. The Internet has evolved to become the most important vehicle for both exchanging and accessing information and the related services. This capability allows the KGB to intercept and monitor diplomatic communications as well as to trick their victims into disclosing information. ... The most powerful and likely to remain secret [Citation Needed] cryptographic mechanism used for encrypting diplomatic cables is the one developed by the British since World War II. The Diplomatic Bag is a high security and, supposedly, a secure bag that is used by the British Diplomats [Citation Needed] during international travels to contain sensitive documents. The bag is designed to prevent the removal of its contents. The bag is made of a special material and it is reinforced with metal in order to ensure the security of its contents. It is used whenever British diplomatic officials travel and the information that is contained in the bag is considered sensitive. 5 days ago · HAYDEN SMITH: Grey's Anatomy (2005) – a British drama TV series produced by the BBC and aired in 2006.
